Charlie McAlister

Charlie McAlister, for the moment, resides in Charleston, South Carolina. It's here that he frantically and methodically brews his own brand of sound and vision by the go- ish gallon. Since the early 1980's, Charlie has been recording music and making visual fodder to marry it to. He's written plays, designed clothing, published 'zines, cooked up (and eaten) experimental recipes, and even submerged himself into a Wal- Mart retention pond in a self-described "failure" of a homemade diving suit. Charlie's visual ramblings have been described as "Raymond Pettibone meets Rev. Howard Finster", and rightfully so. Mcalisterist "psychological spew" permeates and putrefies unwilling surfaces at a speed governed only by the laws of thoughtful spontaneity- a child behind the wheel of an aircraft carrier.

Currently, Charlie continues to publish Sardine Mag -O- Zine along with countless other creative oddities, play sporadic live shows (including an August 2008 date at John Zorn's "The Stone" in NYC), and still find time to explore his native marsh lands gathering everything to pluff mud covered baseballs to deliciously edible shellfish. He's building a shack in John's backyard.
